Actor, short-film maker and film extra, Darren has a passion for film and the buzz of being on set.

His first feature film role was as Sam Neill's picture double and stand-in, for the character "Colin", in director/actor Jeremy Sim's film "Rams" (2020) - a re-interpretation of the 2015 Icelandic film "Hrútar" (translated as 'Rams'), which was written and directed by Grímur Hákonarson.

Darren has since played featured extra roles in Jordon Prince-Wright's independent World War I feature film 'Before Dawn' (2023); the 1970s set Australian outback feature film "Kid Snow" (2023), and the ScreenTime miniseries "The Claremont Murders" (2023).

More recently, he played the character "Sal" in the latest short-film project "Twelve Years" (2023) by filmmaker Alex Lorian, director of "Good for Nothing Blues" (2022) and "Subject 36" (2017).

Additional Television work includes extras roles in two episodes of the second season of the popular children's series 'ITCH' (2020) and TV advertisement commercials for the Western Australian Government Department of Education & Training and the Department of Transport.

He has credited his inspiration to pursue acting work after his experience performing "off-screen" during a pivotal scene with the Australian actor Michael Caton (playing the character 'Les'), in addition to the work assisting in the blocking of numerous scenes with the director Jeremy Sims and Director of Photography Steve Arnold during the filming of "Rams" (2020).
